Interacting with Other People (Part 3)

It is impossible to know everything about another person. Each individual faces life from their own set of personal experiences making everyone unique. Adults have enough experiences in common to facilitate basic communication. This is a start, but to have the kind of interactions that God wants us to have, we must get outside of our own limited experiences and look at things from the perspective of another. This is not easy because one is no longer just facing what one knows about himself, but what one does not know about another. The temptation is always there to retreat into one's own experiences, but this does not develop the relationship. It only serves to self-justify by creating our own image of other people (2 Corinthians 10:12).

The single greatest obstacle that we face in our relationships is the image that we construct of other people. Most of the time we interact with that image instead of with the actual person. Why do we do this? It is easier. That image is a product of our own creation. It is what we see of ourselves in someone else. We know it very well. After all, we made it. But this is a selfish move because we are just interacting with an image of our own creation, not the other person. This is a failure to engage authentically. It creates shallow and impersonal relationships that have no real substance. God calls us, however, to interact with the actual person (Matthew 7:12, 22:39). This is real work because we must suppress our own desires to relate only to what we know. We must reach out and learn about the other person by seeing them as unique and different. Then we can see them as they are, not as we want them to be.

God bless you, and I love you.

Above: The inspired analogy here helps us understand how hypocrisy and inconsistency is often perceived, and how it ought to be viewed. The abhorrence we feel for the airborne germspreaders as they pollute and corrupt food and other valuable substances is the way God feels about “a little folly” in the life, heart, and mind of one who has reputation for the opposite. It’s a pity! There’s a ruined potential conveyed in this figure. However, just as New Testament Christianity is personified in men such as Peter, Paul, Apollos, and others, in Christ we are purged, made new creatures, and made over again into what we were purposed to be! It is up to us to put off the old man, mortify the deeds of the flesh, put away the “little folly”, and set aside the sin that so easily besets us. If you’ve ever spent time shooing away flies (probably all of us have in East Texas), you know they can keep you busy. So, the apostle Peter tells us that we must give all diligence as we work on our character (2 Peter 1:5ff) jp
